DEMANDS BIG SUM FOR ROADS

A Committee of Five Was Appointed Monday By the Chairman

COMMITTEE NAMED LATER

States Attorney Appears Before Board and Explains the New Tice
Highway Law

"Be it resolved:—That, in order to secure for Lake county the money which shall be allotted to this county by the state highway commission for the construction of state aid roads, this board take the necessary and appropriate action, and the chairman appoint a committee of five, whose duty shall be to select and designate upon an appropriate map those public highways in Lake County that shall come under the provision of the statute.

To secure information regarding the amount allotted by the State Highway Commission for Lake county and to appropriate and secure such other information as may be necessary for the institution of the State Aid Road system in this county and to make a full report at the September meeting."

This resolution was unanimously passed by the Supervisors on Monday morning, and in obedience to their command, Chairman Conrad has declared his intention of appointing the committee before the meeting adjourns.

State's Attorney Dady appeared before the board and explained the Tice Law which provides for state aid in constructing and maintaining highways.

Before Lake county can procure state aid, it will be necessary for the Board to submit from three to five names of men who desire to be appointed as Superintendent of Highways of Lake county. The State Board will examine these men and one of the number will be appointed as Superintendent of Lake county. The county officials must designate the roads that will be made State Aid Roads, and each roadway must connect cities, towns or two counties. No roads within a city or village will procure state aid.

Welch (Newport): "There's a question as to whether Lake county can even raise a sum equal to the amount allotted to the county because I understand we are up to our approximate and it might be necessary to call a special election."

In reply to a question, Clerk Hendee explained that Lake county is up to the limit now and has been for several years in the matter of raising taxes.

Chairman Conrad named this good road committee as follows: Brooks, Welch (of Newport), White, Kirchner, and King.

The outcome of the road discussion was that it was decided to have each supervisor pick a man from his township, or more of them to submit to the board meeting in September and the board will submit the names of these men to the state highway commission for consideration in selecting the man who shall be Lake county's highway commissioner.

The committee named recently to obtain bids on auto service for the sheriff reported bids as follows: Griffin garage, $1.50 per hour; Lewis garage, $1.75 per hour; Beach garage, $1.90 per hour. On motion of Emmons, the committee was authorized to make a year's contract with Mr. Griffin.

Supervisor White of Avon brought up the matter of the board doing something about getting proper signs put up at the important cross roads of Lake county. He explained that the law permits town commissioners to do this work, but they fail to do so.

Motion that committee of three be named to look into the expense and steps necessary to have such signs erected. Carried.

Largest of All Barometers.

The big barometer at Fanna, Italy, set up some years ago as a memorial to Torricelli, is thought to be the hugest of all such instruments. The oil column in this barometer stands normally at about thirty-seven feet, and its fluctuations are read in feet instead of inches, as in the case of ordinary thermometers.

TOOK DEADLY POISON

Mrs. Minnie Kelley Takes Bichloride Tablets
With Suicidal Intent

Brooding over her troubles of which the separation from her husband was the greatest, Mrs. Minnie Kelley, 27 years old, on Saturday swallowed a number of Bichloride of Mercury tablets with suicidal intent. She was given prompt medical assistance and as a result it is believed that her life may be saved although this deadly poison is so insidious in its action that it will be impossible to be positive for several days. Mrs. Kelley refuses to discuss her reason for taking the tablets.

Since she separated from her husband about 3 months ago, Mrs. Kelley has been living with her brother-in-law, Emil Zewe, 130 Lincoln avenue. She had been taking in washing and doing various kinds of housework to support herself and her 6 year old daughter.

On Saturday, Mrs. Kelley was working at a Lake Forest home doing a washing. While she worked she seemed to grow more despondent. Finally she called the little girl of the woman for whom she was working and sent her to French's drug store to get her a bottle of Bichloride of Mercury tablets.

The druggist warned the child that they were a deadly poison and cautioned her against taking any of them, but probably because she was the daughter of a well known Lake Forest woman she had little hesitancy in selling them to her.

With this warning ringing in her head and with the word "poison" written plainly on the label of the bottle, the child took the tablets home and gave them to Mrs. Kelley.

Mrs. Kelley grasped the bottle eagerly and proceeded to draw the cork. Pouring some of the tablets into her hand she was about to transfer them to her mouth. "Oh, you mustn't take them—they're poison," the child cried as she tried to grab the bottle.

Mrs. Kelley laughed saddy and pushing the little girl away placed them in her mouth and swallowed them. The child ran screaming to her mother, telling what the washwoman had done.

Drs. Haven and Polmateeri of Lake Forest, were summoned at once and as soon as they learned the deadly nature of the poison that had been taken they proceeded to administer the most powerful antidotes, at the same time giving the patient emetics, which had the effect of removing much of the poison from the woman's stomach.

AUTO DISPUTE SETTLED

Griffin's Garage Is Lowest Bidder For
Automobile Service Needed by Sheriff

The question of the fees to be allowed the sheriff of the county for automobile service needed either in going after prisoners, taking prisoners away or in serving the papers necessary in that office—a question which has been a mooted one during the past three sessions of the Board of Supervisors, was settled for good Monday morning at the special meeting of the Board when bids were received from three Wauegan garages for this work and the work was awarded to the Griffin garage at its low bid of $1.25 per hour for the service. The Beach garage bid $1.90 per hour while the Lewis garage bid $1.75. Time is to be figured from the time the machine starts on its errand and will run until the machine is back in the garage again. There are to be no unreasonable delays on the part of its drivers.

The matter came up last December when Ralph Chittenden opposed the payment of a bill for automobile service which Sheriff Green presented. Chittenden claimed that there was no provision for the payment of such fees to the sheriff.

The matter was debated through several sessions of the Supervisors and finally at the April session it was agreed to call for bids for the work. These were presented Monday morning and the matter closed.

Tomorrow's Burden.

It has been well said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear. Never load yourself so, my friends. If you find yourselves so loaded, at least remember this—it is your own doing, not God's. He begs you to leave the future to him, and mind the present.—G. Macdonald.

For a Sick Room.

Take an ordinary wax candle and burn until the taper becomes level; then put out the flame and cover the top with a layer of salt, leaving only the blackened end of the wax exposed. It will give out a faint but steady light.

About Umbrellas.

You should never fold up an umbrella when it is wet. Always let it stand with handle downward so that the water can run off the ends of the ribs instead of running toward the ferrule and rusting that part of the umbrella.

Two Meals a Day Sufficient.

Though reticent on many matters, the British officers just released from a German fortress agreed in one matter. They found two meals a day sufficient. In England people are sometimes addicted to five—breakfast, lunch, tea, dinner and supper. The continental fashion is a snack for morning coffee, a midday meal and an evening meal. But when the great army of Xerxes was marching through Asia Minor, and city by city had to provide food for the day, the people thanked God that Xerxes and his army ate but once a day.

DIES OF HEART FAILURE

While in Bathing Sunday
Evening Daniel Sullivan
Succumbs

WAS CAMPING AT THE LAKE

A Friend at the Camp Saw That He Was in Trouble But Reached Him to Late to Save Him

Daniel J. Sullivan, 48 years old employed in the Chicago police department died Sunday night at 6:30 o'clock while swimming in Lake Catherine. The coroner's inquest was held Monday morning at the Simons House at which a verdict was returned showing that Sullivan had died of heart failure, rather than from drowning as was at first supposed to be the case. The fact that no water was found in the lungs convinced the jury that death could not have resulted from drowning.

Sullivan came out from Chicago Saturday and was camping with a party of friends on Lake Catherine.

On Sunday his wife and seventeen year old daughter came out from Chicago to spend the day with him. In the afternoon he drove them to Lake Villa, where he planned they should spend the night. Then returning to camp about 6:30 o'clock he decided to take a plunge in the lake to cool off.

He swam around for a while and when he was about twenty-five or thirty feet from shore one of his companions noticed that he seemed to be in trouble.

He kept sinking under the water and fought feebly to keep above the surface as if he was completely exhausted.

"I believe Dan is in trouble and I'm going out to see," one of his companions exclaimed as he ran down to the lake shore and leaped into a row boat. The unusual part of the incident was that the body did not sink, the air in the lungs apparently keeping it upon the surface.

Sullivan lived with his family at 152 Harrison street, Chicago, and was 48 years old. He had been coming here for a number of years and was well known.

He leaves a wife and one daughter. The remains were shipped to Chicago for interment on the 10:12 train, accompanied by his wife and daughter.

CORN CROPS IN UNITED STATES
NEED RAIN BADLY

Corn fields of the United States—two-thirds of them—are burning up under the blazing sun and unless heavy, soaking rains come at once the corn crop of 1913 will be far below the normal. Even heavy rainfalls cannot entirely save the corn crop as so much of it is already so badly "fired" that it is not good enough for fodder. At best the much desired rainfall can only ripen the crop in sections where growth is now at a standstill.

This was the gloomy announcement made by Bernard W. Snow, crop expert for the Bartlett-Frazier company, of Chicago, who rode 300 miles recently through the corn section of Illinois and who considers the situation so serious that he has devoted most of his time during the last three weeks to inspecting the corn fields of Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri and other central west states.

Least a Dry Smoker.

List was a dry smoker of a peculiar type. Massonet, who knew him well in his later years tells us that List could not play unless he had a cigar in his mouth, which he never troubled to light. He would sit down to the piano with a cigar between his teeth and keep munching it all the time he played. When the cigar was quite eaten up, the Abbe would rise from the instrument exhausted.

MAYOR'S HOME BURNED BY ENEMIES

Mayor Joseph Severson's
$5,000 Home Was Destroyed by Fire Friday

FAMILY CAUGHT LIKE RATS

The Belief Is That the Enemies Went as Far as to Commit Murder by Trapping
the Mayor in His Home

Revenge for his activity in reform movements is said to have been the motive in an incendiary act at Highwood Friday morning at 1:30 o'clock, when Mayor Joseph Severson's home, valued at $5,000, was destroyed completely by fire and his family and himself had a close escape from being burned like rats in a trap. Their escape was due to the fact that a young woman happened to be sleeping on a porch across the street from the house and she sounded the alarm which caused the family to escape in their night clothes—efforts to save the furniture and clothing being unavailing.

Mayor Severson is firmly of the belief that his enemies set fire to his home and an investigation has started to see who committed the despicable act.

The fact that two empty kerosene cans were found near the front porch where the fire started, proves that the place was set on fire and persons who gathered at the scene smelled the odor of burning oil very plainly.

The general belief in Highwood is that an effort was not only to menace and threaten Mayor Severson for his activity in reform movements, but that the perpetrators of the terrible offense were even willing to take the life of the mayor and his family to satisfy their vengeance. Recent activity in reform matters is said to have stirred his enemies like they have never been stirred before.

The fact that the mayor on Thursday evening removed from the police force Marshal Heustis for alleged failure to execute his orders in closing "blind pigs" and appointed Nick Williams and Officer Burke to succeed him and to close up the "blind pigs" added fuel to the flames which were burning low in the hearts of the opponents of the fearless mayor and that is why it is said the act was planned for midnight Thursday in the effort to destroy the mayor and his whole family if possible.

It was 1:30 o'clock when a young woman sleeping on the porch opposite the Severson home, which lies on the outskirts of the village heard a noise across the street and looking over she saw two men hurrying away from the place; still, looking in that direction she soon saw flames leaping from the porch and she aroused her family and they at once sent word to the Seversons, who though sleeping in the rooms above, did not know the house was burning. By this time the house was all a blaze and the family escaped only with a few articles of clothing. The house is so far out of the town that the firemen were unable to save it and the whole place, including the furniture was destroyed.

PROGRAM FOR BAZAAR

A Very Good Program is Assured This Year at the Bazaar

Arrangements are now almost completed for the big bazaar in aid of St. Peter's church which will take place in the opera house at Antioch from August 18 to August 23. Father Lynch has secured a great array of talent for the entertainment which takes place every evening and which ought to prove a strong attraction to those who are not otherwise interested in a bazaar.

Little Helen Bowles, the remarkable child reader who made such a great impression last year will again recite every evening. A rare musical treat is promised in the form of solos, duets and trios by Francis, Howard and Edmund Lobin, three members of the famous Paulist choir which recently toured Europe and sang before the Pope and won the first prize in competition with other great choirs. These boys will sing three evenings and should prove a great attraction. Many talented ladies and gentlemen will appear on the program every evening, so that a first class entertainment is guaranteed.

The ladies in charge of the various booths are vying with one another to have the best and most charming booth in the bazaar. Reports say there will be a Japanese Tea Garden and a Summer Garden with Cabaret and everything up-to-date.

The merchants of Antioch, Loon Lake, Lake Villa and Ingleside have been most generous in their support of the bazaar. Next Sunday a handsome advertising program of the bazaar will be issued from which full details can be ascertained.

TO DRIVE NEGROS OUT

Wilmette People Pack Hall in Meeting to Stop Negro Invasion

An uprising against negro residents of the suburb came to a head in Wilmette last night, when men, women and children packed the village hall asking that the trustees take action to prevent a negro invasion.

The meeting followed declarations of many in the village that they would discharge the "mamies" who had done the family washings for years, would do without the service of negro maids, and would induce their husbands to substitute white chauffeurs for the negro drivers whose appearance in livery heretofore been considered quite the thing by north shore automobile owners.

The storm has been brewing for some time. A real estate firm was charged in a circular of protest signed by 65 householders, with making special efforts to induce negroes to move to the suburb.

Then each negro resident in the village received in his or her mail a neatly printed slip, unsigned, which read: "This is no place for you. We wish the land for our own use. Hereafter there will be no employment for you here."

Several chauffeurs who received the slip soon after were discharged. A number of maids already have been cut off from what had promised to be a service of many years.

SUPERVISORS MET ON MONDAY

Auditor Sims Appears Before Board to Explain His Audit

AUDIT NOT COMPLETE

Audit Was Right as Far as It Went, But Did Not Go Far Enough, is Board's Decision

The supervisors Monday afternoon heard discussions back and forth between Treasurer Westerfield and S. S. Sims, the man who audited the books of the county officers recently. Mr. Westerfield was on the aggressive in his effort to show the audit was inadequate and incomplete and Mr. Sims was on the defensive trying to prove that it was.

The consensus of the board at the conclusion was that the audit was all right as far as it went but that it did not go far enough, thus supporting Westerfield's claim that all of his records should have been audited instead of being restricted merely to those records where Lake county gets the funds.

Mr. Sims contended that he had no reason to audit records where the funds go to other persons than the county; Westerfield insisted all records should have been included in the audit.

Mr. Westerfield told Mr. Sims that, so far as his audit report showed, he had not checked up the heirship fund and the miscellaneous fund. Mr. Sims admitted he had not because he said the county had no need of knowing what they show as Mr. Westerfield is answerable to others for the moneys there.

Mr. Westerfield insisted he had not checked the bank balances, merely taking totals as the treasurer's book showed. Sims admitted he did not check the bank balance because he said he had reason to know whether it would jibe with the book balances in the treasurer's office or not. Westerfield asked him how it was that Young and company found Ames' shortage if that was the case. He added that, so far as Sims knew he himself might be short in the bank and his audit never would have discovered it.

Westerfield had his letter to the board read, in which he asked for an audit of all his records; he felt these important books in which $13,000 balances were shown, should have been checked even though, as Sims claimed the county was vitally interested.

Mr. Westerfield added that Sims found all he could against him out failed to note things of his credit.

Westerfield pointed to the fact that he had paid $30 to the state on recommendation of State's Attorney Dady shortly after stepping into office, explaining it covered the interest on state funds which Fred Ames had embezzled, he said this item was not found by Mr. Sims and insisted that it should have been discovered. Sims admitted he had not discovered the fact. Sims insisted he had checked all the accounts wherein Lake county was concerned, adding that those where the county was not interested he had not checked, although there were several such records.

Westerfield added that, so far as Sims checking went the treasurer's office might have been $10,000 short and Sims would not have found it, and he felt that was why the audit was taken.

"It should be how would my successor know what funds were coming to him, using it on our audit?" asked Westerfield. "I only checked what funds come to the county—the state can take care of itself," said Sims.

The contract made with Sims was read—clearly said he was to audit all the records of all the offices, it did not eliminate any of the records, even those where the county derives nothing from the collections made by the treasurer.

Goss and Kirchner insisted that they would have been better satisfied if the entire records of all the offices had been audited by Mr. Sims. Goss adding "The report is thus no more clear as to what money the treasurer has on hand and whether he is as short as his predecessor or not. It should have been complete" (and that's what Westerfield is insisting upon).

Sims came back with: "It's the committee's place to check over who knows he has on hand, not the auditor." He made no answer to the fact that Young and company found a shortage which Fred Ames had accounted.

MILLIONS FOR CROPS

McADOO PROVIDES FUNDS FOR MOVING FARM PRODUCTS.

Treasury Head Will Place Money in Banks—Prime Commercial Paper to Be Taken as Security.

Washington, Aug. 2.—With the apparent double objective of eliminating the possibility of money stringency in connection with the movement of the crops and of affording to the country a powerful object lesson as to the value of the government as an agency in banking business, McAdoo proposes to turn into the channels of trade from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000.

This is the first time in history that the government has accepted "commercial paper" for such deposits. A supplemental declaration, however, says that only banks which have "taken out at least forty per cent of their authorized circulation" will be permitted to participate in this distribution.

Commercial paper is to be taken at 65 per cent of its face value as security for these deposits, bonds other than government bonds for 75 per cent of their "market value," and government bonds at par.

The government will charge two per cent interest on these funds and the distribution is to be limited to banks in "two or three principal cities" in each of the states "where harvesting is now in progress." Fifteen per cent of the money is to be returned in December, 20 per cent in January, 30 per cent in February and 25 per cent in March. All commercial paper offered first must be passed upon and approved by the clearing house committees in the cities where the banks of offering the paper are located.

AMENDS MONEY BILL

FEW CHANGES MADE BY HOUSE COMMITTEE—IS READY FOR CAUCUS.

ADVISORY BOARD IS PROVIDED

Changes Alter Division of Federal Reserve Earnings and Provision for Mutual Rediscoups—Smooth Progress Is Predicted.

Washington, Aug. 4.—The Democrats of the house banking and currency committee practically concluded consideration of the administration's currency bill on Friday, after more than five weeks of continuous and stormy discussion.

The bill was ordered closed and reprinted, and on Monday the Democratic committee members will take a formal vote recommending the measure to the Democratic caucus.

The bill differs little in its essentials from the administration measure framed by Representative Glass, Chairman Owen and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and approved by President Wilson. The complete government control of the federal reserve board which will direct the new banking and currency system, deemed by the president the all-important factor of the bill, was retained.

At the eleventh hour the Democratic members of the committee incorporated an amendment providing for an advisory board of bankers to "advise" the federal reserve board. This amendment was in the nature of a compromise with the banking interests, which protested vigorously against the exclusively governmental feature of the control of the board.

Another important amendment incorporated in the bill altered the rediscout section conferring the power to require federal reserve banks to mutually rediscout paper. A change was made in the division of the earnings of the federal reserve banks created by the law. As amended, the balance of earnings after the five per cent dividend and the 20 per cent surplus will be paid, 60 per cent to the government to be used as a sinking fund to reduce the national debt, and 40 per cent to be divided among the member banks.

In the reserve section the committee reduced the period during which a bank must hold a 25 per cent reserve against deposits from 26 months to 60 days. As finally passed the reserve section requires that after a period of gradual changes the country banks must keep their 15 per cent reserves either in their own vaults or in the federal reserve bank of the district in which they are located.

By a vote of seven to five, the conference struck from the bill a provision previously ordered inserted forbidding interlocking directorates between banks. It was struck out on representations that the president believed it should be considered apart from general currency legislation.

The so-called insurgent amendments to the bill providing for currency on warehouse receipts for cotton, corn and wheat were voted down by a viva voce vote, with little discussion.

Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, chairman of the house Democratic caucus, predicted smooth progress for the administration currency bill.

STORM HITS CAPITAL

GALE SWEEPS WASHINGTON—KILLS 3; HURTS MANY.

White House Windows Crash as President's Secretary Rushes Wilson to Safety.

Washington, Aug. 1.—Three persons lost their lives, scores were injured and many small buildings were demolished and a large property loss was caused by a terrific wind, rain and hail storm which swept Washington on Wednesday. The wind blew seventy-two miles an hour and more than one and one-half inches of rain fell in an hour.

The wind wrecked a three-story brick office building occupied by the B. S. San company, real estate dealers, and fifteen persons were carried down in the crash. W. E. Hillon, vice-president of the real estate company; Thomas B. Fealey, sixty-five years old, a clerk, and an unidentified man who entered the building to try to rescue those caught in the wreck, were taken from the debris dead.

The neatly kept lawns of the White House were devastated. Three huge elm trees, uprooted by the wind, were thrown bodily across the lawn and up to the very portico of the building, blocking the drives. President Wilson was seated in the executive offices when the wind crashed through several windows in the White House proper. Secretary Tumulty hurried the president and Representative Korbly of Indiana, with whom he was conferring, to a sheltered interior room, away from the searching lightning flashes.

ENVOY WILSON IS ROBBED

Ambassador Victim of Pickpockets, But Silent on Importance of Booty—Barred by House.

New York, Aug. 4.—While escorting two women friends into a Long Island train in the Pennsylvania station, Henry Lane Wilson, United States ambassador to Mexico, who had just arrived from Washington, fell victim to pickpockets Friday. The thieves took his wallet, containing $128, valuable papers and official memoranda. Mr. Wilson declined to discuss the incident but from other sources it was learned the loss of important papers it contained will prove a serious inconvenience to the ambassador.

Ambassador Wilson declared the report that he had quarreled with President Wilson about the Mexican situation was false.

Washington, Aug. 4.—To prevent any aggravation of the Mexican situation, which in the view of the nation's officials is slowly adjusting itself, the administration, it became known Friday does not look favorably on the proposal to have Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson appear before the house committee on foreign affairs. Feeling is growing among the officials that Ambassador Wilson is a factor in promoting objectionable discussion in Mexico.

LIND TO MEXICO

PRESIDENT APPOINTS PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE WHO MAY BE PEACE MEDIATOR.

AMBASSADOR WILSON IS OUT

Secretary of State Tells Why Envoy Resigned—Executive's Agent Will Seek to Prepare for Policy to Be Bared Soon.

Washington, Aug. 5.—President Wilson on Monday took the first steps in the policy through which he proposes to deal with the Mexican situation. He formally accepted the resignation of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson to take effect on October 14, and sent to Mexico City as his personal representative former Gov. John Lind of Minnesota, a life long friend of Secretary Bryan.

Mr. Lind is not accredited to the Huerta government, but the understanding is that when a stable administration is established in Mexico he will formally be named as ambassador.

"Ex-Gov. John Lind of Minnesota has been sent to Mexico as the personal representative of the president to act as adviser to the embassy in the present situation. When the president is ready to communicate with the Mexican authorities as to the restoration of peace he will make public his views. Governor and Mrs. Lind departed for Mexico on Monday night by rail to proceed via New Orleans or Galveston."

It became known that a further announcement would be made by President Wilson in a few days, possibly on the arrival of Mr. Lind in Mexico City.

While officials of the administration here look with disfavor upon the processes of armed revolution to overthrow constituted governments in Latin America, there is a distinct feeling of sympathy manifest toward the Liberal movement in Central America, of which Madero's administration was the beginning in Mexico. Arguments, therefore, that it was necessary to have in Mexico the "iron hand of Diaz," which might be expected in Huerta, failed to make an impression on government officials here, who believe that the Latin-American governments cannot thrive on the extremes of civil tyranny or military dictatorships.

BIRD'S TROUBLE AT AN END

Fancier's Pet, Anticipated Winner of Many Prizes, Most Effectually "Isolated."

Here is a poultry story which comes from the country. While away on a holiday a fancier who owns some valuable specimens instructed a servant—a rather new country girl—in the feeding of the birds, and gave strict directions that she was to communicate with him immediately in the event of any of them showing signs of illness.

One day he received a letter stating that a bird of which he had had great expectations as a prize winner was unwell, and from the symptoms described the fancier concluded that it was a case of roup—a very infectious trouble. Accordingly he wired to the girl:

"Isolate bird at once. Important. Home this evening."

"Where did you put the bird, Mary?" he asked as soon as he arrived.

"It's in the coal 'ole," said she.

"You isolated it at once, of course?" he added.

"Well, I didn't," replied the girl.

"Simply. 'I got Jim to do it. 'E put it in the coal 'ole, w' the broomstick, an' it was all over in a twinkling!'"

ECZEMA ON ENTIRE SCALP

R. F. D. No. 2, Sunfield, Mich.—"I was troubled with eczema. It began with a sore on the top of the scalp, broke out as a pimple and grew larger until it was a large red spot with a crust or scab over it. This became larger finally covering the entire scalp and spread to different parts in the body, the limbs and back and in the ears. These sores grew larger gradually until some were as large as a quarter of a dollar. They would itch and if scratched they would bleed and smart. The clothing would irritate them at night when it was being removed causing them to itch and smart so I could not sleep. A watery fluid would run from them. My scalp became covered with a scab and when the hair was raised up it would raise this scab; the hair was coming out terribly."

"I treated about six months and got no relief and after using Cuticura Soap and Ointment with two applications we could notice a great difference. It began to get better right away. In a month's time I was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Bortha Underwood, Jan. 3, 1913.

"How do they know what Johnson's got? Whether he uses a curve or not? How can they tell his outshoots fall? Whether his curve's big or small? How can they tell what he's got on the ball? Nobody's seen it yet."

So sang a minor poet of the major leagues. The hero of this baseball epic was Walter Johnson, the marvelous pitcher of the Washington club, who has just beaten all records by hurling the ball for 56 consecutive innings with such skill and cunning that not a batsman of an opposing club has been able to score a run.

Speed was the great factor in the achievement—dazzling, sizzling speed! The big Idahoan's delivery is like the flight of a shell. The mightiest hitters of the American league are as helpless as town lot players when Johnson turns loose his fastest ball; "Ty" Cobb, "Home Run" Baker and Jackson alike are babes in his hands.

Johnson's amazing swiftness in pitching is no mere fancy. It has been scientifically measured. In the testing room of the Remington Arms company at Bridgeport, Conn., Johnson showed that his right arm could hurl the baseball at the rate of 122 feet a second! It was acknowledged that he could do even better, because in athletic parlance he was not warmed up. It is well known that a hurler gathers speed as a game progresses.

Johnson flung the sphere through an aperture in a frame of wood about two feet square. Running from top to bottom were ten very delicate and filmy copper wires. These were broken by the ball, and by an electrical device the moment of passage was accurately timed. Five yards away was a steel plate and the impact of the ball on this barrier again caused the electric clock to register. Thus the exact time of the ball's flight was mathematically determined.

The velocity obtained by Johnson is all the more extraordinary when it is known that a bullet from the new government .45 automatic pistol travels 800 feet per second.

A high power hunting rifle, .35 caliber, auto-loading, travels 2,000 feet per second. The Twentieth Century Limited, the fastest long-distance train in the world, makes the 978.7 miles from New York to Chicago in just 20 hours, or an average speed of 48.9 miles every hour. This means a velocity of nearly 72 feet a second.

Suppose Johnson's speedball kept on traveling at 122 feet a second right on toward the Windy City at its own hurricane speed. It would eat up the 5,163.840 feet to Chicago in just 11 hours and 48 minutes. The ball would beat the train to Chicago by eight hours and 12 minutes. In other words, the catcher who received the ball could go to bed, have a full night's rest, get up and into his uniform again, and be on hand in the morning to meet the Twentieth Century as she rolled into Chicago.

Putting it another way—the train leaves New York at 2:45 p. m. daily. Time is set back at Buffalo by just an hour, so that the onrushing train gains 60 minutes on her westward journey. Eleven hours and 48 minutes after the start Johnson's hurler has reached Chicago, or at 1:33 a. m. Chicago time, the roaring locomotive has just plunged through Cleveland without stopping, more than 350 miles away.

The striking energy of Johnson's missile was shown to be 160 foot pounds. That means that it possessed approximately half the force in impact of a bullet fired from a .45 automatic pistol!

According to these figures, it takes less than half a second for a ball thrown by Johnson at his high speed to travel from his fingers to catcher's glove!

That is why he bewilders even the quickest witted batsman. He isn't able to guess whether it is a straight ball, an in or an out curve, a drop, or whether the sphere is going to jump up into the air in defiance of the law of gravity.

"Any time you get a hit off Johnson," declared Napoleon Lajoie, himself one of the most formidable wielders of the bat that the game ever knew, "you must not think that you're smart. Just figure that you're lucky—lucky that you were able to make that blind swing at just the right spot. There never was, and I doubt if there ever will be, a pitcher as great as Johnson. If he turned loose his very hardest throw with his best curve on it no catcher could get down in time to receive the ball."

"Every ball he throws has stuff on it that can't be solved. Some of the hope that his swiftest ones take are bigger curves than a man ever threw before. I've seen him slam balls up to the plate that didn't look larger than a plumb."

Not surprising, is it, that Johnson is such a terror?

The quiet, modest young Idaho youth—he is only twenty-five years old—also fooled his opponents into giving him another record. Last year he struck out 303 men in 386 innings. None of the other wizards could touch that mark. Before he became a big leaguer striking out batsmen was merely a pastime for him. Out in Weiser, when only nineteen, he was playing in the Idaho State league, and among the performances credited to him was the striking out of the first eight men who faced him in an important game, and he later struck out 11 other men during the nine innings.

And these men were all crack players, many of whom are now stars in the western leagues. In that Idaho season Johnson was the star pitcher in fifty-seven straight games in which not a run was scored off his delivery. So you see he got the habit early!

After that feat Johnson applied to various smart managers of the clubs in the big cities. But they wouldn't even give him a trial. They were disdainful, and easily declared that Johnson would be shattered by the heavy artillery of the major leagues. It remained for the then ill-fated Washington team to send Catcher Hicken-ship in 1907 out to Weiser to investigate the picturesque stories that came east of the youth's prowess. The scout lost no time in getting Johnson to sign a contract as soon as he had seen him pitch a few innings. That Washington is now one of the leading clubs of the American league is due in large part to the skill of the western recruit.

When Johnson made good from the jump there was one among all the Napoleonic managers who had turned him down. But his steady and astonishing improvement is shown by the following official table:

Year	G.	D.H.	R.	B.B.	S.O.	W.	L.	Ave.
1907	14	99	31	16	72	5	8	.384
1908	28	167	65	29	149	14	11	.618
1909	37	233	109	45	158	12	24	.333
1910	41	253	88	74	204	24	16	.593
1911	35	281	107	63	220	23	15	.692
1912	40	244	86	72	231	30	10	.750
Total for 5 years	198	1237	437	300	1103	108	84	.683

A big, likable fellow is Johnson, a raw-boned product of the prairie farms. There is nothing very speedy about him except his pitching. Otherwise he is slow as law. He moves slow, eats slow and even runs his motor car in an "out-of-gasoline" manner. He saves all his energy for the diamond.

After seeing Johnson shoot the ball at the plate you wouldn't wonder the poet was inspired to song. You wouldn't wonder at the dazed batsmen.

If you can't see it you can't hit it.

Resuscitated Memory.

Charles Reade, the novelist, believed in the daily newspaper as a source for incidents that would furnish better material for romance than could possibly be created by any effort of fancy. He kept a scrap book in which he stored away newspaper clippings which were afterward to masquerade as fiction. His story of "A Simpleton," is one in which Dr. Christopher Staalas of London is lost overboard in mid-ocean, picked up all but dead from a raft, taken to Cape Town with all memory of the past utterly obliterated, but afterward restored in small fragments through the agency of a copy of the terrific thunderstorms peculiar to that latitude. That story of forty years ago has been more than confirmed over and over again in real life by incidents of memory and personality lost and regained. The last of these comes from Warren, Pa., of a man, a common laborer, working at a silice sand plant, who, struck by a fall of ice, has, while lying in a hospital, regained his identity, lost a dozen years ago, and says he is John Oliver, the owner of 125 valuable building lots in Wheeling, W. Va., and of mineral lands in Lancaster, Pa. A telegram from relatives in Chicago confirms the story. It can not be wholly unpleasant to wake up after twelve years' sleep of this kind and find one's self not dead broke, but entirely solvent.

Some Books Must Pass Away. The discovery by Professor Cobb of the department of agriculture that documents can be preserved apparently indefinitely in a vacuum offers, if further tests verify his results, a convenient way of exhibiting precious and rapidly disintegrating manuscripts while permitting their exhibition under glass. But it does not offer much comfort to authors whose work is printed on wood pulp paper. With so many books in the world, to try to preserve sample copies in a vacuum would be far too ambitious an undertaking. Whatever books survive will have to be kept alive by the process of reprinting from time to time, and not many modern books stay in vogue long enough for that.

THAT the failure to destroy house flies in a community is a blot upon civilized methods of life is the opinion of Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology of the United States department of agriculture, who probably has made a more exhaustive study of the insect than any other scientist in America. Doctor Howard is watching with interest the campaign against the pest and believes that the preventive methods being urged constitute the only feasible means of eradicating this source of danger to mankind. The conclusion reached by the department of agriculture expert is that the fly acts as a freight train for the output of Germville. The carrying of typhoid germs, he says, is the fly's

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Uncle Sam Manufactures Some Expensive Toys

WASHINGTON.—In the midst of the ponderous national duties which constantly beset him, Uncle Sam finds time to indulge in the occupation of toy-making, an occupation which makes him beloved by children and admired by grown-ups who may never hope to see the mighty originals of the wonderful toys.

Three rooms in a tiny brick building, tucked away in a secluded corner of the Washington navy yard, where the thunder of giant machinery making mighty guns is shut out and the overhanging crashing of metal is faint and dim, constitute the toy shop for things marine.

Six of Uncle Sam's most able assistants, all experts in their line, are employed here steadily turning out the expensive playthings. There is one workman laboriously threading wire into a long cage. Here is another slowly carving with small instruments many pieces of wood that dovetail perfectly once their jagged individualities are united in a whole. There is another with a tiny brazier melting small pieces of metal with anxious care, and far in a shadowy corner another is arranging his paints.

A room in the building of the army signal corps is the home of the army toy, the tiny field gun, the mule team with animals complete, all less than three feet long; the miniature field hospital and a horde of other things.

Children going through the war and navy departments cry out in delight when they first learn what a wonderful Santa Claus Uncle Sam can be. If he puts his hand to it, one millionaire gravely offered a secretary of the navy $15,000 for a single toy and was refused because Uncle Sam desires that his playthings be enjoyed by all alike.

Hardy plainmen, visiting fairs in desert towns, stare open-mouthed at Uncle Sam's toys and chuckle with pride at the strength which he has shown them in miniature.

Uncle Sam's toyshop at the navy yard is wonderful. Here exact models on a scale of one-quarter of an inch to one foot—of the mighty fighting craft of the nation are built. Tools so larger than a surgeon's lancet are used to cut and shape the hull, for every line in the miniature dreadnought is made according to the plans of the original. A mistake of one one-hundredth of an inch would be fatal.

Jackson Monument Guns Are Bronze Smoothbores

WITHIN the circular fence which girdles the green mound on which the Jackson monument stands in Lafayette square are four old field guns pointing outward from the corners of the white stone pedestal. They are slightly depressed.

The guns are bronze, muzzle-loading smoothbores, with a caliber of about two inches. They are crusted with the gray-green which comes to cannon with age and lends charm to antique ordnance.

The carriages have been freshly painted, the wood gray and the iron parts black. The carriages are well preserved. It seems impossible that they can be the original carriages of these guns. The wheels have wooden hubs as big as beer kegs, with fourteen spokes and seven felloes. The lynch pin through the spindle is of a pattern that was superseded several years ago by the new artillery hubcap fastening. The elevating screws, square wooden axles, square timber trails, the brackets for trail hand-spike, the slings for rammer staffs and the rummer seats and fastenings seem to mark these gun carriages as of the Civil war type of field artillery.

Two of the guns, those at the southeast and the northwest corners of the pedestal, have the ornamented handles that were common in seventeenth and eighteenth century French and Spanish ships' guns and fortress artillery. The guns at the southwest and northeast angles of the monument are without those handles. The guns with handles are chased on the barrel.

The writer asked Col. Spencer Cooby, engineer corps, United States army, officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, about these guns. Colonel Cooby said:

"Nine years ago the office made an effort to ascertain the history of the four cannons located at the base of the Jackson statue in Lafayette square, but was unable to learn anything definite either from our own records or from those of the war department."

Says Failure to Kill Flies Is Blot Upon Civilization

THAT the failure to destroy house flies in a community is a blot upon civilized methods of life is the opinion of Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology of the United States department of agriculture, who probably has made a more exhaustive study of the insect than any other scientist in America.

Doctor Howard is watching with interest the campaign against the pest and believes that the preventive methods being urged constitute the only feasible means of eradicating this source of danger to mankind.

The conclusion reached by the department of agriculture expert is that the fly acts as a freight train for the output of Germville. The carrying of typhoid germs, he says, is the fly's chief asset, but, in addition, the insects manage to distribute a few hundred thousand tuberculous, cholera, infantum and dysentery bacilli. As a general thing, every fly carries a quarter of a million bacilli and spends most of the summer months in scattering free samples wherever he goes.

A careful collection of garbage in cans, watertight floors for stables, absolute cleanliness and careful inspection by board of health employees are the fly-prevention methods suggested by Doctor Howard.

The final solution of the fly nuisance, he points out, must rest entirely on prevention—that is to say, the breeding places of flies must be done away with. The majority of flies being reared in stable refuse. It is stated, would seem to point the way for the successful abatement of the fly nuisance.

Dr. Arthur L. Murray of the District of Columbia health department, who is supervising the local campaign of a large number of stables and suggest to owners steps that may be taken to prevent these places from serving as fly hatcheries.

Problem of Feeding the Help in Large Hotels

THE problem of feeding the help in large hotels has perplexed managers in every city in the world, said the head of one of Washington's largest hotels the other day. "The question is now being considered by many of the large hotels in this country whether it is cheaper to raise the salary of the employees and not to furnish them with meals or to provide regular meals for them."

"In many large hotels there is a class of help that is fed in the kitchen, while other employees have special dining rooms. The chambermaids, bellboys, porters, scrubwomen and all employees of the lower grade are fed usually from the help's kitchen. One of the leading hotels of Chicago allows the first officers $30 per month for their meals, and they order from the regular menu. As this is the most exclusive house and the cafe prices are almost prohibitive, this amount is not too much to give any officer a fairly good meal. Two other hotels a little less pretentious allow the first of-icers 50 cents for breakfast, 75 cents for lunch and $1 for dinner from a bill of fare prepared especially for them, the prices being about 25 per cent. less than a regular card. Second and third officers are furnished a menu, also especially prepared, giving them a soup, meat or fish, one vegetable, tea or coffee and a dessert. Several New York hotels have put their officers on a basis the same as mercantile business and engage their men on weekly salary, not including board, laundry or other side issues which have been so long customary with the hotel employee."

WAR REMINISCENCES

LITTLE FIGHT "ON THE SIDE"

American Soldiers in Trenches Before Santiago Stop Firing to Witness Most Amusing Scrap.

A "scrap" between an Irishman and a Teuton in the American trenches before Santiago, while the battle was on, was so funny that the soldiers stopped firing at the Spaniards to watch the dissension in their own ranks, says a volunteer in an exchange.

Private Cassidy of company E, Sixteenth U. S. Infantry, Private Mueller and Corporal Mulroney were facing the foe side by side when Cassidy was hit by a Spanish don's bullet and sent to that "bourne whence no traveler returns." Mulroney was so busy pumping lead toward Santiago that he failed to note his comrade's death until the poor fellow was being removed from the firing line. Then he saw Mueller in the act of appropriating two cartridge belts, one filled and the other almost empty. Now ammunition was to be had in abundance the regiment was supposed to have all the cartridges he could shoot away, regardless of accuracy of aim, so it galled Corporal Mulroney to see another—and a German at that—taking possession of what once belonged to his chum.

"If ye had anny respect for the dead ye'd lave thim cartridges alone," said Mulroney, with a scowl on his face that would have scared a Spaniard into surrender. "It isn't the likes of ye, ye Dutch duffer, that can fall helr to me friend Cassidy's belongings. I'll thank ye, an' with a bad grace at that, to pass me thim belts before I take a punch at your dirty face."

"Dot vas all right," replied Mueller defiantly, his phlegmatic blood stirred by the heat of battle. "Cassidy was a good feller, all right, and he told me I could haf dose ammunitions ven he vas—"

"Ye lle, ye Dutch robber!" cried Mulroney, dropping his rifle and shaking his fist under Mueller's nose. "Yell put thim cartridges down this minnit or I'll rake yez wish a Mauser had struck ye instid of me fast."

"I vas no liar," retorted Mueller, also dropping his rifle, "und I can vip anny Irish dog robber who—"

This pointed allusion to the fact that Mulroney had once been a "striker" for his captain was more than Mulroney cared to stand, and his brawny arm straightened with stunning effect on Mueller's cheek. At once, as quickly the German's fist landed on Mulroney's nose, and then, to the wonder of their comrades on either side, the two men went down together, striking, kicking and biting with complete indifference for the fierce battle in progress. Before either combatant had inflicted any particular harm upon his opponent a young lieutenant interfered and ordered the men back to their places, with the assurance that each would suffer severely for such a flagrant breach of discipline.

For a few minutes both men pulled their triggers with a fair degree of regularity, notwithstanding the constant exchange of civilities which they could not forego, but Mulroney changed the situation suddenly when he discovered that no commissioned officers were near enough to balk his scheme of vengeance.

"If ye're not a coward ye'll roll down the hill a bit of a ways behind the trench," Mulroney muttered to his foe, "an' when I meet ye at the bottom may blivn boy mercy on ye before I'm t'rough wid ye!"

Mulroney looked to the rear and saw a steep slope of nearly fifty feet and a tangled growth of shrubbery at the bottom. He glanced along the line in both directions and saw no shoulder straps nearer than a dozen files, and then accepted the challenge by casting himself out of the trench and swiftly rolling toward the shrubbery. Before he had traversed half the distance Mulroney was descending in the same fashion, and a resumption of hostilities ensued immediately upon his arrival at the foot of the slope.

It might be stated parenthetically that a big captain separated Mulroney and Mueller and sent them back once more to their places on the firing line, where they acted like good soldiers the rest of the day. After the fighting was over Mulroney lost his chevrons and several months' pay, and Mueller suffered even worse punishment.

Fixing It

"Why were you late in returning to camp last night?" asked the lieutenant of a private at Camp Dennison, near Cincinnati.

"Train was very late, sir."

"Well, the next time the train's late take care 'y' come by an earlier one."

Expedience

Few can afford to take the post taken by the captain of a company guerrillas. The story is that the head of a company men, when informed that numbering 500, was said:

"Well, hoys, we'll and if we can't lick 'em."

Boiler Inspector Thirteen states that laws.

UNUSUAL FEATS OF MEMORY

Thomas Babington Macaulay, Historian, Among Those Who Could Repeat Whole Books.

One of the most astonishing mnemonic feats on record is recorded by John Wesley. "I knew a man about 20 years ago," writes Wesley, "who was so thoroughly acquainted with the Bible that if he was questioned as to any Hebrew word in the Old, or any Greek word in the New Testament, he would tell, after a little pause, not only how often the one or the other occurred in the Bible, but also what it meant in every place. His name was Thomas Walsh. Such a master of Bible knowledge I never saw before, and never expect to see again." Walsh had a close rival in Macaulay, who, according to James Stephen, could repeat "all Demosthenes by heart, and all Milton, as well as a great part of the Bible."

A strange instance of freak memory is recorded in the case of a servant girl in a Scottish manse. She was almost illiterate, yet when delirious in fever, surprised those around her by repeating long passages of the Bible in Hebrew. The kitchen where the girl spent her evenings adjoined the minister's study. He was accustomed to read aloud. The girl had not understood or consciously taken heed of the reading, yet her mind had seized upon and stored the phrases.

Men admire women who are perfect ly square, but not too angular.

How Do the Classics Help Us?
The answer lies in one little word, art. The classics, more than any modern literature, teach us art, and art is the conscious purpose of man to make this world more beautiful. Philip Sidney says that the object of poetry is to make this too-much loved world more lovely; I should extend his definition a little further and say that the object of art is to make this world more lovely, more lovable, and more loved.—Henry D. Sedgwick, in the Atlantic.

Rather a "Tall" Yarn.
Ralph of Coggeshall, an English abbot of the thirteenth century, told a staggering yarn: The Orford fishermen brought up one day in their nets a sea man who had no hair on his head, but a long ragged beard. Kept in Orford castle, he ate fish and meat both raw and cooked, but could not be made to speak. Yet, when the fishermen took him out one day for a swim, though he dived under the nets which they spread to prevent his escape and grumbled derisively at them, he followed them back to land and captivity. At last, however, the "wild man" had had enough of it, managed to escape to sea and disappeared.

Novelist Misquoted Scripture.
Novelists do not seem to be very strong in their knowledge of the scriptures somehow, and Sir Walter Scott in "The Heart of Midlothian" attempts to point a moral with the words: "Our simple and unpretending heroine had the merit of those peacemakers to whom it is promised as a benediction that they shall inherit the earth." The fact is that the peacemakers did not receive any such promise, but it is said that "the meek shall inherit the earth."

Speaking of Weddings?
Orange blossoms can be used as an anesthetic, a Johns Hopkins professor has discovered. If you just get enough of them the ceremony will be quite painless.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

IT WAS SO PUZZLING

By JOHN NEWTON.

Dobory and Angyal were sitting on the divan in the smoking room talking of a fair-haired lady. The stillness of the night, the red light of the lamp on the arm, the sword and shield on the wall, the strong Turkish tobacco wrapped everything in the room in a blue fog and led their imaginations into the empire of mystery. They talked of many things in the abstract, though the principal subject of their conversation was a golden-haired lady who was very real indeed.

"You know that I am madly in love with her," said Dobory, the magnate. "When I see her I have to use all my self-control not to throw myself at her feet. But listen—last week we were on our way towards the Turkish ruin and it was getting dark as we returned. She and I had walked a little ahead of the others. We stopped on a bridge to wait for them. Below us the Danube was rushing and above our heads the moon was shining. Suddenly I felt her hand gripping my arm and she said: 'I can look into your very soul as if it were made from glass. I can read every word written there. Surely you can also read mine. No, please do not say anything.' Strange words, you must admit. I did not answer. The others caught up with us. She was unusually quiet all the rest of the evening. Occasionally she looked at me and smiled sadly.

"And what happened then?" asked Angyal, the poet, very much interested.

"We arranged a new excursion to Bookstal, and then we drove home. The next day we started out in six carriages. She sat opposite and until we reached Jause she was bubbling over with good humor. There some gypsies began singing their ugly melancholy songs. Her face had turned quite pale and she bit her lips nervously. At last I did not dare say anything more to her, for I felt her soul was filled with bitterness. Suddenly she arose and went away from the rest of us to sit down alone on a bench in the wood. I followed her and noticed that her eyes were full of tears and her face was convulsed with pain."

"Irma, do tell me what is the matter with you?" I asked.

"She stamped her foot angrily and said: 'Please leave me alone.' An hour later she drove home alone without saying goodby to anybody. But now comes the strangest part of all. When we returned we passed her Irma. She stood on the balcony with her slender hand at us, and when my carriage passed she threw a red rose to me and cried 'Goodnight, Dobory.' What do you think of this, my friend? How am I to explain the sudden change in her treatment of me? She must have a secret. But what can it be?"

"A very interesting woman," said Angyal. "It would be something to a poet to look into her soul. Perhaps he might be able to solve the riddle."

Now, here is the real explanation. On the day of the excursion to Rockstal Irma had just received a pair of new shoes, which, of course, she must put on right away. Until they reached Jause, as long as they were sitting in the carriage, everything was well, but when she put her foot on the ground she might have screamed with pain. She felt as if she were sitting on a crater of glowing lava bathing her feet in it. The others who noticed her distorted face began to question her and to put an end to this she walked to the bench in the wood and when Dobory did not leave her alone even there she had an attack of nervous crying. At last the pain became so unendurable that she drove home. As soon as she got rid of the two instruments of torture she felt as happy as ever before and her happiness culminated when she saw Dobory driving by and she threw him the rose.

The next day the golden-haired girl, beautiful and charming as ever, promenade in the park.

In front of the bandstand she met Dobory, who at first felt rather embarrassed, but Irma's bewitching smile soon gave him back his courage.

An hour later Dobory called on his friend, the poet Angyal. In a button-hole was a rose Irma had worn in the morning. As soon as he saw Angyal he burst out:

"Congratulations, old boy, Irma has promised to be my wife."

But neither of the two ever succeeded in solving the riddle of Mrs. Irma Dobory's life.

Found Doctor Didn't Need Him.

Wedding cut ups in Clay Center have a new form of diversion. The Times tells about it: "Recently a Clay Center young man was going to be married. The day of the affair, in the morning a friend pretending to be Dr. Olsen, telephoned him, telling him that under the new law a man had to undergo a physical examination by the city health officer before he could get married. He took it all in, in solemn earnest, and went to Dr. Olsen's office for the examination, Olsen being city health officer. Reaching the office he told the doctor he was ready for the examination. 'What examination?' asked Olsen. 'The examination you told me

I would have to undergo. I am the young man who is to be married.' 'Some one has been playing a joke on you, my friend,' was the doctor's answer and the young man has about come to that conclusion himself. Still he thinks he will get even some day."—Kansas City Star.

"A Little Bird Told Me So." The popular expression, "A little bird told me so," used to convey the idea that by telling you would betray your informant, but is probably adapted from the twelfth verses of the tenth chapter of Ecclesiastes: "Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber; for a bird of the air shall carry thy voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

A ROMANCE OF STRENUOUS AFFECTION

BY REX BEACH

SUGGESTED BY THE PLAY BY REX BEACH AND PAUL ARMSTRONG

Illustrated By Edgar Bent Smith

COPYRIGHT 1910 BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Cowboys of the Flying Heart ranch are heartbroken over the loss of their much-prized photograph by the defeat of their champion in a foot-race with the cook of the Centipede ranch. A house party is on at the Flying Heart. J. Wallingford Speed, cheer leader at Yale, and Culver Covington, inter-collegiate champion runner, are expected. Helen Blake, Speed's sweetheart, becomes interested in the loss of the photograph. She suggests to Jean Chapin, sister of the owner of the ranch, that she induce Covington, her lover, to win back the photograph. Helen declares that if Covington won't run, Speed will. The cowboys are hilarious over the prospect. Speed and his valet, Larry Glass, arrive. Helen Blake asks Speed, who has posed to her as an athlete, to race against the Centipede man. The cowboys join in the appeal to Wallie. And fearing that Helen will find him out, he enters as an unknown, figuring that Covington will arrive in time to take his place. Fresno, the club singer from Stanford university and in love with Helen, tries to discredit Speed with the ladies and the cowboys.

CHAPTER VIII.

LAWRENCE GLASS was beginning to like New Mexico. Not only did it afford a change of romance, discernible in the deep, haunting eyes of Marielotta, the maid, but it offered an opportunity for financial advancement—as, for instance, the purchase of Willie's watch. This timepiece cost the trainer twenty-one dollars, and he sold it to Speed for double the amount, believing in the luck of even numbers. Nor did young Speed allow his trainer's efforts to cease here, for in every portable timepiece on the ranch he recognized a menace, and not until Lawrence had cornered the market and the whole collection was safely locked in his trunk did he breathe easily. This required two days, during which the young people at the ranch enjoyed themselves thoroughly. They were halcyon days for the Yale man, for Fresno was universally agreeable, and seemed resigned to the fact that Helen should prefer his rival's company to his own.

As for Glass, he recounted tales of Marielotta's capitulation to his employer, and wheezed merrily over the discomfiture of the Mexican girl's former admirers. "She's a swell little dame," he confided to Speed one afternoon, as they lounged luxuriously in the shade at their customary resting place. "Yes, and I'm axes with her, too." They had set out for their daily run, and were now contesting for the seven-up supremacy of the Catskill mountains. Already Glass had been declared the undisputed champion of the Atlantic coast, while Speed on the day previous had wrested from him the championship of the Mississippi valley.

"But Marielotta is dark!" said the college man, as he cut the cards. "She is almost a mulatto."

"Naw! She's no dinge. She's an Aztec, an Aztec's a swell people. Say, she can play a guitar like a barber!"

"Miss Blake told me she was in love with Carara."

Glass grunted contemptuously. "I've got it on that insurrecto four ways. Why, I'm learning to talk Spanish myself. If he gets lousy, I'll cross one over his bow." The trainer made a vicious jab at an imaginary Mexican.

"He ain't got a good wallop in him. I thought cowboys was tough guys," continued Glass, "but it's a mistake. That little Willie, for instance, is a lamb. He packs that Mauser for protection. He's afraid some farmer will walk up and poke his eye out with a corn-cob. One copper with a night-stick could stampee the whole outfit. But they're all right, at that."

He acknowledged, magnanimously, "They're a nice bunch of fellows when you know how to take 'em."

"The flies are awful today," Speed complained. "They bite my legs."

"I'll bring out a bath robe tomorrow, and we'll hide it in the bushes. I wish there was some place to keep this beer cool." Glass shifted some bottles to a point where the sunlight did not strike them.

"I'm getting tired of training, Larry," acknowledged the young man, with a yawn. "It takes as much time," Glass shook his head in sympathy. "Seems like we'd ought to hear from Covington," said he.

"He's on his way, no doubt. Ain't it time to go back to the ranch?" Glass consulted his watch. "No, we ain't done but three miles. Here goes for the rubber."

It was Berkeley Fresno who retreated cautiously from the shelter of a thicket a hundred yards up the arroyo and started briskly homeward, congratulating himself upon the impulse that had decided him to follow the training partners upon their daily routine. He made directly for the corral.

Simply because he don't go skully-hootin' around in the hot sun ain't no sign he can't run."

"What about them empty beer bottles?" demanded Willie. "No fellow can train on that stuff. I went out there myself and seen 'em. There was a dozen."

"Mebbe Glass drank it. What I claim is this: We ain't got no proof. Fresno is stuck on Miss Blake, and he's a knocker."

"Then let's get some proof, and dam' quick."

"St. Senores," agreed Carara, who had been an interested listener.

"I agree with you, but we got to be careful—"

Willie grunted with disgust. "—we can't go at it like we was killin' snakes. Mr. Speed is a guest here."

Again the little guy man expressed his opinion, this time in violet-lit profanity, and the other cowboys joined in.

"All the same he is a guest, and no rough work goes. I'm in charge while Mr. Chapin is away, and I'm responsible."

"Senor Bill," Carara ventured, "the fat vaquero, he is no guest. He is one of us."

"That's right," seconded Willie. "He's told us all along that Mr. Speed was a Mercury-footed wonder, and if the young feller can't run he had ought to have told us."

Mr. Cloudy showed his understanding of the discussion by nodding silently.

"We'll put it up to him in the morning," said Stover.

"If Mr. Speed can't r-r-run, w-what you do, eh?" questioned the Mexican.

Nobody answered. Still Bill seemed at a loss for words. Mr. Cloudy stared gloomily into space, and Willie ground his teeth.

On the following morning Speed sought a secluded nook with Helen, but no sooner had he launched himself fairly upon the subject uppermost in his mind than he was disturbed by a delegation of cowboys, consisting of the original four who had waited upon him that first morning after his arrival. They came forward with grave and serious mien, requesting a moment's interview. It was plain there was something of more than ordinary importance upon their minds from the manner in which Stover spoke, but when Helen quickly volunteered to withdraw, Speed checked her.

"Stay where you are; I have no secrets from you," said he. Then noting the troubled face of the foreman, quoted impatiently:

"You may fire when ready, Gridley."

Still Bill shifted the lump in his cheek, and cleared his throat before beginning formally.

"Mr. Speed, while we honor you a heap for your accomplishments, and while we believe in you as a man and a champion, we kind of feel that it might make you stretch your legs some if you knew just exactly what this foot-race means to the Flying Heart outfit."

"I assured you that the Centipede cook would be beaten," said the college man, stilly.

"Isn't Mr. Speed's word sufficient?" inquired the girl.

Stover bowed. "It had sure ought to be, and we thank you for them new assurances. You see, our spiritual interest is due to the fact that Humpty Joe's get-away left us broke, and we banked on you to pull us even. That first experience strained our credulity to the bustle point, and—well, in words of one syllable, we come from Joplin."

"Missouri," said Willie.

"My dear sirs, I can't prove that you are going to win your wagers until the day of the race. However, if you are broke to start with, I don't see how you can expect to lose a great deal."

"You ain't got the right angle on the affair," Stover explained. "Outside of the unbearable contumely of Joslin twice to this Centipede outfit, which would be bad enough, we have drawn a month's wages in advance, and we have put it up. Moreover, I have bet my watch, which was presented to me by the officials of the Santa Fe for killin' a pair of road-agents when I was deputy sheriff."

Miss Blake uttered a little scream, and Speed regarded the lanky speaker with new interest.

"It's a Waltham movement, solid gold case, eighteen jewels, and engraved with my name."

"No wonder you prize it," said Wallie.

"I bet my saddle," informed Carara, in his slow, soft dialect. "Stump leather wit' silver linings. It is more dear to me than—well—I love it vor much, senor!"

"Seems like Willie has made the extreme sacrifice," Stover followed up. "While all our boys has gone the limit, Willie has torped 'em all; he's bet his gun."

"Indeed! Is it a good weapon?"

"It's been good to me," said the little man, dryly. "I took it off the quivering remains of a sheriff in Dodge City, up to that time the best hip shot in Kansas."

Speed felt a cold chill steal up his spine, while Miss Blake went pale and laid a trembling hand upon his arm.

"You see it ain't intrinsic value so much as association and sentiment that leads to this interview," Stover continued. "It ain't no joke—we don't joke with the Centipede—and we've relied on you. The Mex here would do murder for that saddle. Carara nodded, and breathed something in his own tongue. "I have parted with my honor, and Willie is gamblin' just as high."

"But I notice Mr.—Willie still has his revolver."

"Sure I got it!" Willie laughed, abruptly. "And I don't give it up till we lose neither. That's the understanding!" His voice was surprisingly harsh for one so high-pitched. He looked more like a professor than ever.

"Willie has reasons for his caution which we respect," explained the spokesman.

J. Wallingford Speed, face to face with these serious-minded gentlemen, began to reflect that this foot-race was not a thing to be taken too lightly.

"I can't understand," he declared, "with a touch of irritation, 'why you should risk such priceless things upon a friendly encounter.'"

"Friendly!" cried Willie and Stover in a tone that made their listeners gasp. "The Centipede and the Flying Heart is just as friendly as a pair of wild boys."

"You set, it's a good thing we wisd you up," added the latter.

Carara muttered fiercely: "Senor, I work five years for that saddle. I am a good gambler, si, but I feel somebody before I lose it—to the Centipede."

"And is that Echo photograph worth all this?" inquired Helen.

"We won that photograph at risk of life and limb," said Willie, doggedly. "From the Centipede—"

"—and twenty other outfits, senor."

"It's a trophy," declared the foreman, "and so long as it ain't where it belongs, the Flying Heart is in disgrace."

"Even the Leven X trends us scornful!" cried the smallest of the trio angrily. "We're a joke to the whole state."

"I know just how these gentlemen must feel," declared Miss Blake, tactfully, at which Stover bowed with grateful awkwardness.

"And it's really a wonderful instrument," said he. "I don't reckon there's another one like it in the world, leastways in these parts. You'd ought to hear it—clear as a bell."

"And sweet," said Willie. "God! It's sure sweet!"

"I begin to feel your loss," said Speed gravely. "Gentlemen, I can only assure you I shall do my best."

"Then you won't take no chances?" inquired Willie, mildly.

"You may rely upon me to take care of myself."

"Thank you!" The delegation moved away.

"What'd you think of him?" inquired Stover of the little man in glasses, when they were out of hearing.

"I think he's all right," Willie hesitated, "only kind of crazy, like all eastern boys. It don't seem credible that no sane man would start to bluff after what we've said. He'd be flyin' in the face of Providence."

Got in a Quiet Knock.

When Joaquin Miller, the Poet of the Sierras, edited the Eugene Register, he ran a joke column that is still remembered among Eugene veterans.

"Miller," said an aged Eugenist, "used to like to roast the coal man. Thus, I remember how, in a description of a wedding, he once wrote:

"The presents offered the bride were unusually sumptuous and abundant. Conspicuous among them was a ton of coal. This won general admiration and approval by reason of its quaint, old-fashioned maseliveness, it being much heavier than the tons of coal of the present day."

Overworked.

Mrs. Knag—If we women had the time to read the papers as you men have we'd know just as much about politics and other things as you.

Mr. Knag—But, my dear, you have just as much time as I.

Mrs. Knag—Nonsense! I never have time enough even to get through with the household department, the women's page, the beauty expert, the fashion notes, the marriages, the divorce news and the society column and often have to skip the death records and the bargain advertisements.

PRINCESS MARY 16

Daughter of Engand's Royal House Lacks Vivacity.

Queen Mary Will Not Allow Her to Make Debut Until She Reaches the Age of 18—Life She Leads at Home.

London.—English society has been interested lately in the question of the coming out of her royal highness, the young Princess Mary. As the only daughter of the king of England it is natural that there should be much speculation as to her future prospects, and her name has already been coupled by matchmakers with those of several foreign royalties.

Princess Mary was sixteen years old on April 26, but Queen Mary has no intention of introducing her daughter to the world as a grownup woman till after she is eighteen. As a matter of fact, the princess looks younger than her real age, and in mind and education she is younger, for though naturally she has had every educational advantage she has been brought up so simply that in mind she remains somewhat undeveloped.

To a certain extent she inherits her mother's shyness and lack of geniality.

Princess Mary.

Queen Mary even now will shed tears of sheer nervousness at the prospect of receiving an ambassador and his suite, though she will converse with perfect aplomb, intelligence and interest with a doctor at a large hospital, or will present prizes in public to poor children with a charming little greeting for each recipient in the view of cheering thousands.

Princess Mary's nervousness and went of savoir faire were exemplified not long ago when she had to be fitted for a dress.

Two dressmakers attended, and the young princess, after much thought and some hesitation, made a remark about the weather. Then, giving up the attempt to manufacture conversation, she occupied herself busily picking up the pins which had been dropped on the floor.

"I thought it was better than talking when I had nothing to say," she told her governess, "and at any rate it was useful."

It is interesting to note that she inherits some of the traits of her great grandmother, Queen Victoria. She has

BULLET PROOF WOLF KILLED

Old Whitley's Depredations Cost Rancher $50,000 in Past Five Years.

Wheatland, Wyo.—Old Whitley, an unusually large gray wolf whose depredations have cost the stockman of this section $50,000 during the past five years, was slain by George Koons on the Mertz ranch on the Laramie plains.

Old Whitley was probably the most cunning wild animal that ever operated in southeast Wyoming. He eluded poisoned food and traps set out to catch him, while his fleetness of foot carried him out of reach of Russian stag-hounds.

He seemed bullet proof, for on many occasions ranchmen have heard the thud of their bullets as they struck his hide, but he always got away until this time. His hide is scarred by many bullet wounds and his feet and legs are knots of broken rods and muscles. Koons will obtain rewards of over $100 for the capture of Old Whitley.

REVEALS HIS DOUBLE LIFE

Divorce Suit Shows Silk Salesman in New York Kept Up Two Homes.

New York.—The successful suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Ada M. Clingen against John J. Clingen, a silk salesman, disclosed the fact that Clingen had maintained two establishments, with a family in each. The decree of divorce was granted to the wife by Justice Tompkins of the supreme court at White Plains.

Until last December Clingen, it appears, lived with his wife, a son and daughter in Claremont avenue. Then it became known that he was maintaining another woman and two children in a home in Cedarhurst, L. I. The two children in Cedarhurst are very young, while his son and daughter are each more than seventeen years old. The name of the woman at Cedarhurst was not given in the papers.

NEW YORK FILM LAW SIGNED

Ordinance Safeguards Audiences in Moving Picture Theaters in Metropolis.

New York.—Mayor Gaynor signed the new moving picture ordinance which was passed recently by the board of aldermen. The ordinance goes into effect on Aug. 8.

The new ordinance provides better safeguards for the patrons of moving picture theaters by laying down stringent requirements concerning the construction and fireproofing of the buildings in which moving pictures are exhibited. The new regulation permits an increase in the seating capacity from the limit of 300 at the present time to 600, 20 per cent. of whom may be seated in the gallery, provided the building is erected on a twenty-foot lot.

The ordinance was passed after vigorous opposition of the board of aldermen for many months, and repeated urging by the mayor. Many moving picture building projects have been delayed in anticipation of the new ordinance. The additional seating capacity allowed will be welcomed by many exhibitors who up to the present have been limited by the law to 300, but who have the room for many more.

Let your heartiest meal be at night, or whenever your work for the day is over. Fruit, toast, soft-boiled eggs and oatmeal make a good breakfast. ## Delightful and Unpleasant States.

One of the most delightful states of mind to which the average man is subjected is uncertainty as to the exact sentiment entertained for him by a woman whom he admires, and whom he knows to like him, but whom he is not dead set upon winning for himself. One of the most unpleasant states is the certainty that a woman deeply loves him when it is inconvenient or impossible for him to reciprocate. ## PARKS NO LONGER A LUXURY

Not Only a Health Necessity, But Constitute a Most Important Civic Asset.

One of the latest cities to secure general plan reports, joining in with the leading American cities in securing such general schemes of development, is New London, Conn. The report, presented by John Nolan, of Cambridge, formerly of Philadelphia, contains the following reasons why New London and every city should acquire parks:

"There are at least four reasons why New London should now act in a large way in acquiring and improving land for use as parks and playgrounds. (1) Property is steadily increasing in value. It is not likely to be cheaper than it is now. (2) Once bought, park lands increase in value. All other public works depreciate. Parks appreciate. (3) Parks pay for themselves, by making new real estate values. Some examples in support of this statement are given in the appendix. (4) A sound park policy, vigorously pushed by public authority, soon brings rich gifts from private individuals. The history of American city parks furnishes much evidence in support of this tendency. Cities that own few parks seldom receive gifts of parks. On the other hand, cities like Hartford, Conn., that have a long and honorable record in public park-making, have an equally long and honorable record of private gifts for parks.

"Parks are no longer considered a luxury by growing American cities. They are classed with streets and sewers and schools as a necessity. They contribute directly to health and efficiency, to pleasure and economic wealth. Moreover, they stir and nourish civic pride."

TWELVE HOUSES TO THE ACRE

New Building Regulation That Has Recently Been Put in Operation in England.

On Monday, June 9, the first town-planning scheme under John Burns' town-planning act of 1909 became operative. Before doing so it had to pass through various stages of approval by the local government board, and also to run the gauntlet of the houses of parliament.

The plan thus approved concerns 2,320 acres in the suburbs of Birmingham, upon which, according to the law as established by these various authorities, not over 12 houses to the acre may be erected. This means that, at about five persons to the house, this suburb, laid out on the best of lines, with open space in abundance, will accommodate about 140,000 persons.

In most American cities two-story houses are erected about 40 to the acre, and the average number of individuals is five and two-tenths. This would mean a crowded population of 482,560 on the area of 2,320 acres.

International Garden City Association. As a result of the enormous amount of correspondence relating to town planning and garden cities in different parts of the world and the formation of various associations in different countries to deal with the propaganda side of these movements, an International Garden Cities and Town Planning association has been formed. For the present the offices will be at 3 Gray's Inn Place, London, W. C., and Mr. Ewart C. Chipp will act as honorary secretary. Already a number of organizations dealing with these important matters have indicated their willingness to join such an international movement, and it is proposed to have periodical conferences in the various countries represented in the membership.

During the past two months more than two hundred requests have been received from different parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, America and Australia for information on civic matters.

Landscape Beauty an Asset.

The courts in several states have declared that landscape beauty is an asset and that man has neither legal or moral right to desecrate it by the erection of billboards. All states objectionable blots on the landscape, even if a constitutional amendment be necessary in order to control the matter. One year from date of passage of the act should be given the billboard companies to retire from the business. This is but fair, and we should insist that the billboard must go.—Exchange.

Melons of Immense Size.

In the southeastern part of Asiatic Turkey immense melons are grown on the rich and moist land which, in the wet season, forms part of the bed of the Tigris. For about half of the year the river is much reduced in size and then the melons are produced in great abundance on the bottom lands uncovered. Some watermelons are declared by American consuls stationed in that part of Turkey to be as big as flour barrels. The musk melons are nearly as large but rounder. Neither variety is of fine quality, the flesh being too coarse and not very sweet.

PHIL LOST THE BET

By IDA SHEPLER.

McQuire laugally watched the smoke curl from his cigar, play in weaving circles about his shapely face and head, then float off to the realms of pipe dreams. Presently a dreamy, satisfied smile stole into his blue eyes. He was so sure of his truth, integrity and love for himself. Adorable Lora. He was hastening back to her and their wedding day at steamer speed.

The half closed door of his room let in the sound of voices. It was Ed Rainey and Tom Larkin. McQuire had run into them somewhere abroad. They were coming home on the same steamer.

"Gone, gone bad, isn't he?" Rainey was saying. "Believes that Lora is innocent personified. Doesn't know that she's a good five years or more older than himself. Don't guess that she's out to marry a fortune. Don't know that she's, in turn, been sweet heart to all of us, or anything of that kind of hers and Lambert's, does he?"

McQuire's cigar dropped from his parted lips. The red leaped in an ugly flame to his face. They were talking, these friends of his, of the girl he was to marry. His right hand opened to slap little Rainey's face in his calumniating mouth. Larkin's answer came slowly, between puffs at his pipe: "McQuire is young. She isn't good enough for him, that's only too true. But, Rainey, the girl was only a little reckless, too much of a flirt. Nothing worse. Lambert is a liar. McQuire's a good leaker, and nobody's fool, if he was born to revel in gold."

"Lora would not marry any man unless he brought her gold?" Rainey still persisted. "Oh, you need not worry about shutting the door; McQuire is on the deck. I saw him go up an hour ago."

McQuire fidgeted and worried about his cabin for an hour after. Not a doubt of Lora's love edged itself in his mind. No one but himself had ever possessed her heart. Of that he was sure. After awhile the plan he would work to confuse these friends came crowding itself into his head. It was neither new or original, but it would do.

Rainey and Larkin found him dull company forthwith. Then their reason came out. He had received a telegram at starting. Hoped it was not so bad as stated. His fortune, to the last dollar, was in jeopardy. He had made some foolish investment. Further he would not talk. Simply moped, smoked and read.

"Rainey, the little sneak, will go straight to Boston and tell Lora," McQuire thought to himself. "Nothing will suit him better. Nothing will suit me better, either."

From New York McQuire wrote a brief letter to Lora: "My Dearest: I'm viewing the hole where it has all gone down. You no doubt have heard of the Parkinson company crash? The private fortunes they swamped with their own stupendous failure? I have trusted Parkinson as I might have my father, had I one at present. Well, I'm not going to cry over spilled milk. It's done, and can't be helped. I can work for my darling. I have youth, health, strength and love left. You know I studied law. Behold a future Webster in your husband. I cannot wait to see you. Lovingly, Phil."

Rainey was with Lora when she received this epistle. He watched her pretty face turn pale, then flushed.

"Of course it's love in a cottage," said Rainey.

"Of course it isn't," she flared. "It is a fact that he was fool enough to trust his immense fortune in the keeping of that company he refers to?"

"Guess he did. He was tolerably frank about the matter. He is playing cheerful to you in this letter. He believes that nothing would separate your love from him."

"What!" she nearly shrieked; "marry a pauper? Bah, he hasn't brains enough to get a first client. Me do kitchen work and make my own clothes for love's sake? Well, hardly."

Phil was nearly a month getting over everything that followed that letter. At the end of that time he was as good as new.

Gladys, Phil's cousin, went calling on Lora, her cousin's late betrothed, shining on her hand.

"It wasn't fitting for Lora to notice this, but she did the lovely bracelets Gladys was wearing. 'A gift from Cousin Phil,' the girl quite innocently answered."

"I never knew that you had a cousin as fond of you. Seems to me that I heard your cousin lost all his money." Lora's eyes were wide with surprised inquiry.

"Oh, no," Gladys went on, still more innocently. "Phil never lost his money. Not a cent. He was engaged to some girl. I couldn't get him to tell me who. He brought her so many presents from abroad. Then, because one of the friends he same home with, bet him, or something like that, with his affianced wouldn't marry him; if he were to lose his money, wrote her he had lost all. Phil lost the bet, of course, but wasn't it lucky for me?"

MISERERE MEI DOMINI

By CHARLES W. CUNO.

In the province of San Diego, near the River La Plaza, grew at one time the prettiest flower nature had ever fashioned in a rustic picture was she, indeed, divine, Mercedes.

Don Palo, dark handsome, stood beneath a festooned palmetto and gazed enraptured at this picture.

In the distance could be heard the silvery peal of a convent bell and, when the wind quieted, the faint echo of the Miserere floated on the air.

Palo approached and touched the listening girl upon the arm.

"Oh, Palo! Is it you?" she cried. He took her hands in his and printed a fervent kiss upon her lips. "Yes, Mercedes," he answered, "I have come back to see you once again."

"But— but—" she began.

"No, Chiquita, there is little danger. No one knows that I am here."

Out of the convent window Sister Sorice looked listlessly.

As she looked the two parted, and Mercedes was left standing alone. She was the daughter of a miller, the son of the governor of the province of San Diego. Sister Sorice shook her head sadly. Three months before she had witnessed their first meeting.

When Palo went to his father and confessed his love for Mercedes, he flew into an awful rage.

"Son," he said sternly, "you will never go near the miller's daughter again. I shall give orders. If you are caught there, you will be put in prison. Remember, I mean what I say."

But Palo came again to see his Mercedes and Sister Sorice was watching from her high convent window. Alas, he came to tell his sweetheart that he was going away on a trip to far off Spain, but he will be back again in a year, perhaps sooner. Will she wait for him till then?

"In the morning," he said, "I may see you again, 'tis for the last time by the bridge that goes over the Plaza. Is it not so? Min Carrisima!"

Tears came to the girl's eyes as she nodded her head. He kissed her and went down the path. In the morning she was waiting for him at the bridge when Palo arrived. She was about to fly into his arms, when, out from the shrubbery stepped a soldier. "I arrest you, Senor," he said.

The officer's back was turned toward her. An impulse, a flash, and it was done. She had drawn the dagger from her girdle and plunged it into his back. He fell like a log. Palo shrank back aghast.

"If I am caught now," he cried, "But you will not. Go! Go! Go! she cried, in frenzy pushing him toward the bridge. At the bridge she stopped. "Kiss me once," she cried. He stooped and kissed her passionately.

They parted and Mercedes began to run quickly through the woods.

She saw people standing around the body. She fancied she heard her name spoken. Fleet as a deer, she sped away, but before she had gone a hundred yards, she was discovered. There was a shout and a dozen started after her.

The silver bell of the convent was again ringing and she ran instinctively towards the sombre sheltering walls. She stumbled up the steps and fell into the arms of Sister Sorice.

Snatching the silver crucifix from her girdle Sister held it defiantly into the faces of the oncoming mob. They recoiled from it as from a great repellent force.

"Stop," she cried, "she has taken refuge with God. Would you defile the sanctuary of the Lord?"

They looked into the calm, determined face of Sister Sorice, and one by one, slunk shamefacedly away.

Trembling, Mercedes wept out her story to the sister, who, when she heard it, wept with her.

"My child," said Sister Sorice, gently putting her arm about Mercedes, "I will tell you a story. Twenty years ago, a maiden bid her lover good-bye by that little bridge down there. 'Wait for me,' he said. 'I will return soon!' But he did not, and soon the maiden took refuge in this convent to hide her shame. A little girl was born and adopted it as his own. That maid, Mercedes, was myself. For twenty years I have looked down that road, watching for the return of my lover."

She paused and looked at Mercedes with infinite yearning. "And you," she continued at last, "has the miller never told you?"

Mercedes looked at the sister in surprise. "Told me what?"

"You—you are—my—child."

Many years have passed since then. One weary watcher has been laid to rest, but there is a sister still, with snowy white hair and kind, wistful face, who stands by the high little window and looks out upon the road. Perhaps she fancies she hears a voice. It is only the humming of the old bell and the echo of the quavering voices as they sing: "Miserere mei Domini!"

HOME TOWN HELPS

RAISE STANDARD OF HOUSING

New Ordinances in Force at Duluth Constitute an Advance Step of Importance.

Various cities in recent months have taken cognizance of the importance of good housing conditions. One of the first to take constructive action by a complete revision of its housing code, following a searching investigation, was Duluth. Like every other city which has been careless with respect to the way its people live, Duluth had been housing some of its population in dark interior rooms and dark, damp basements; it had room overcrowding and lot overcrowding; and its toilet facilities were in many instances not conducive either to decency or to health.

The first result of these discoveries was the appointment by the common council, on the recommendation of the mayor, of a housing committee. This committee at once set about the task of drafting an ordinance based upon a model law. A draft of this ordinance was submitted to the National Housing association for comment. It was made the subject of several public hearings in Duluth and finally passed by a vote of 9 to 6.

Hereafter in Duluth both tenement houses and single family dwellings must have enough open space on their lots to light and ventilate every room, rooms must be large enough for habitation and must have windows opening to the outer air, the height of wooden tenement houses will be limited and other safeguards provided against fire. Every new tenement house must have within each apartment a proper sink with running water and a water closet located either in a bathroom or in a separate compartment. Every dwelling house, when water main and sewer are accessible, must also have running water and a water closet within the house.

For existing houses the regulations, of course, are not so strict as for new buildings; but for them also the standards have been raised in the interests of decency and health.

CONFER OVER CIVIC AFFAIRS

Mayors of New York State Hold Annual Meeting to Discuss Important Matters.

The mayors of New York state meet for general discussion every year. Their meeting is directed to results, which they get. At their meeting in 1912 they urged the passage of an act authorizing the appointment of local city and village planning commissions. This act became the law about a month ago.

At their 1913 meeting, the mayors took the next step, as follows:

"Resolved, That the conference authorize the advisory committee of city planning experts to make a survey of the cities of the state and to arrange a state city planning conference in accordance with the recommendations made in its report; also urging every mayor and board of aldermen to create and to organize a city planning commission, as authorized by the law enacted at the last regular session of the legislature."

Grading the Suburban Lot.

When grading or terracing is to be done on the suburban lot, go about it in the right way by removing the top soil first to a depth of from six to eight inches—more if this soil is deep; the color will tell you—over the entire surface to be excavated, and also over the area which is to be terraced or ramped or altered in any way. Put this in a convenient place where it will not interfere with building and grading operations, but will be accessible when wanted. Then do the work of grading everywhere, bringing all levels to within six inches of their proposed finished surface. When all this is done restore the top soil to the top, spreading it evenly and a little deeper than six inches allowed over those areas which have been built up, as these will settle.—From "Suburban Gardens," by Grace Tabor.

Co-Operative Garden Village.

A prospectus has just been issued in England of the Cardiff Workers' Co-Operative Garden Village society, Ltd. One of those started as a result of the hard work of Prof. Stanley Givons, says the current number of "Garden Cities and Town Planning." The estate of 110 acres lies in easy access to Cardiff, and the layout plan by Raymond Unwin is a particularly interesting study in development. The houses are to be not more than ten to the acre; 34 are now in course of erection at rents of $1.30 a week and upward.

Engineers as City Managers.

There were one hundred and fifty applications for the city manager'ship of Sumter, S. C., most of which were from engineers. A well-known engineer, in commenting on this fact, said: "It seems to me likely that if the city manager plan makes headway it will provide quite an opening for engineers, since, for the present at least, the members of the engineering profession seem to be better trained than those in any other profession for the work involved."
